A year after demonetization

The CBI has registered 77 cases related to "corruption and malpractice" since November 8, 2016 when the government scrapped the old notes of Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,000. The CBI said Aadhar card numbers of children were misused to deposit old currency notes in banks. "Several cooperative banks in Maharashtra and Gujarat" were found to be involved in illegal exchange of notes, the agency said.

Some individuals had got hold of new currency notes within days of the old notes being scrapped. "Since there were restrictions on individuals in terms of withdrawal of new currency, investigation is on to find out how they could come in possession of such amounts," a CBI statement said.

The agency said it had also registered seven preliminary enquiries into the alleged corruption cases. Illegal tender around Rs. 396 crore has been recovered so far. CBI Director asked the agency's officers to give top priority to demonetisation related cases. The fraudulent exchange of old currency notes took place mainly at commercial and cooperative banks (59 cases), post office (18), railway (5) and insurance firm (1).

The CBI said it received 92 complaints from the general public which reported such illegal exchange in various organisations. "Some private individuals (26) and 21 public servants (mainly from post office and the banking sector) were nabbed with huge amounts of new currency," CBI spokesperson Abhishek Dayal said.
